I saw the accident as I was looking out of my window. The driver was using his phone when he crashed. I'm letting Neighbourhood Watch know. He's lucky no one was killed.

As the site admin was able to log into the Django Admin Panel and update the article as the contributor has asked.

Pets Paradise was wrongly quoted as helping the family in this article.

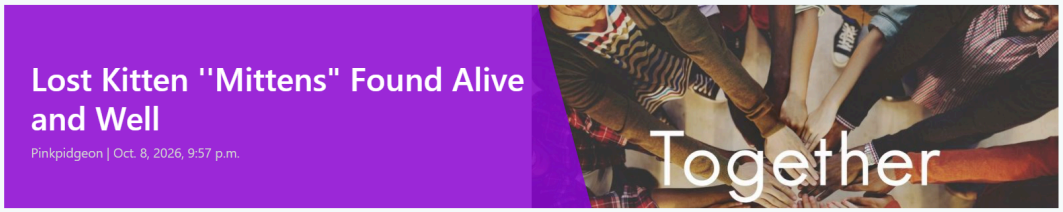

Mittens was a tiny, cream-coloured kitten with four distinct white paws that made her look like she was constantly wearing winter gloves. One breezy Tuesday afternoon, a rustling pile of autumn leaves caught her attention, leading her right through a small gap in the backyard fence. Before she knew it, the familiar sights and scents of her home vanished, replaced by the towering, noisy labyrinth of the outside world. For seven long days, Mittens wandered through overgrown gardens and hid under damp porches, her belly rumbling as she braved the chilly rain and the frightening barks of neighbourhood dogs.

Back home, her absence left a heavy, quiet void. Her family searched tirelessly every morning and evening, shaking her favourite treat container and calling her name until their voices grew hoarse. They posted brightly coloured flyers on every lamppost within a mile, hoping someone might spot the frightened little wanderer. As the week dragged on, the nights grew colder, and hope began to dwindle, but the family refused to give up, leaving her favourite soft blanket and a bowl of food on the back porch every single night.

On the seventh evening, just as the sun dipped below the horizon, a faint, raspy meow echoed from behind the garden shed. Following the sound, her family shined a flashlight into the shadows and spotted two wide, glowing green eyes and four muddy white paws. Mittens had finally found her way back, shivering but safe. Within minutes, she was wrapped tightly in her warm blanket, purring like a tiny engine as she happily devoured a bowl of warm food, finally home where she belonged.

So, the Porter family would like to thank the local community for helping out and also the local business Pet Paradise for advice to the family.

This was swiftly corrected after publishing.

Hi Neil I've just been browsing the WOTS blog and have found it really inspirational, especially during these times with community being threatened by far right groups. Is there any way I can be a contributor? I have great writing skills and do a lot community wise across the area.
